THE following from the Indianapolis Sun, a republican paper, shows that even some republicans in the Hoosier State think Durbin is capable of making a mistake: "Gov. Durbin lost his head when he sent to Kentucky a letter of refusal in which he sought to expose the short-comings of the courts of Kentucky and accused Judge Cantrill of making strained rulings and instructions in order to advance his candidacy for the United States Senatorship. A brief statement that request for requisitions had been denied because he felt that the accused could not yet receive a fair trial, would have been enough and would not have exposed, as his letter did expose, him to the charge of partisanism."
